PRESS & MEDIA

Manuel Añò

Short biography

Manuel Añò is a French-Canadian underwater explorer, commercial diver, technical diver, photographer and filmmaker.

For more than ten years, he has been exploring aquatic environments, from the icy waters of the Arctic to the wrecks of both World Wars lying at the bottom of the English Channel, to reveal their natural, scientific and historical riches.

The founder of ProdAqua, he works with audiovisual productions, scientific institutions and environmental organizations. His work brings together exploration, photography, documentary filmmaking and science outreach.

Committed to protecting aquatic environments, he contributes in particular to the work of Mission 1000 Tonnes and leads the Sequana Incognita project, dedicated to discovering the underwater worlds of the Seine.

Through his images, exhibitions and talks, he strives to make these little-known worlds accessible and to share the knowledge and experience gained in the field.

These texts may be reused for journalistic publications, event presentations and editorial communications, with credit to Manuel Añò.